Have you ever wondered what you'll look like when you're old? How about some of the most famous people in the world?

Facial cosmetic surgeon Julian De Silva, based on Harley Street in London, has developed a new technology that works out what some of the biggest celebrities in the world will look like in 35 years.

It uses data from people's lifestyle choices, skin colour, and genes to superimpose images over each other, and predict how much their faces will change in the coming years.

"This new facial mapping technology allows us to look scientifically into the future and see exactly how a person will age," said De Silva. "Meghan Markle comes out best from the Future Face algorithm."

The Duchess of Cambridge will also age pretty well, he said, while time won't be so kind so others who may have partied more in their younger years.

"[Meghan Markle's] genes, olive complexion, and terrific lifestyle choices suggest she will age the best of the well-known people we tested," De Silva said.

"Like Meghan, the Duchess is ageing beautifully," he said.

Kate Moss

"She is still one of the most beautiful women in the world and she has remained at the very top of the modelling industry for the last 25 years," said De Silva.

"But the rate of ageing of skin tends to accelerate when women reach 40. This process has already started with Kate and she could also suffer from lifestyle choices such as her decision to smoke which can considerably speed up the ageing process."

Prince Harry

"The software shows how Prince Harry will increasingly look like his father Prince Charles in 35 years' time when Harry will be 68," said De Silva. "The royals have fantastic genes and do tend to live to a ripe old age — partly due to excellent diet and the very best healthcare money can buy."

Harry Styles

"As you would expect Harry Styles will completely lose his boyishness over the next 35 years and have a much more rugged appearance," said De Silva.

"The ageing process will be accelerated by the lifestyle which goes with being one of the world's leading pop stars — exhausting tours can really take their toll on your skin."

Harry Kane

"Harry Kane is a year older than Harry Styles and we expect them to have aged in similar ways over 35 years," De Silva said of the England footballer.

"Obviously it helps that Harry Kane is so fit and has an excellent diet, but being a footballer does age the skin because you are outside in the sunlight 52 weeks a year."
